Agenda

Topic

The Problem

Excessive screen time for children.

32%

Only 32% of parents said mobile devices had negative impact on their child's development (Statista)

63%

63% of kids in the U.S.
spend over 2 hrs a day on recreational screen time (The Journalist's Resource)

Target Audience

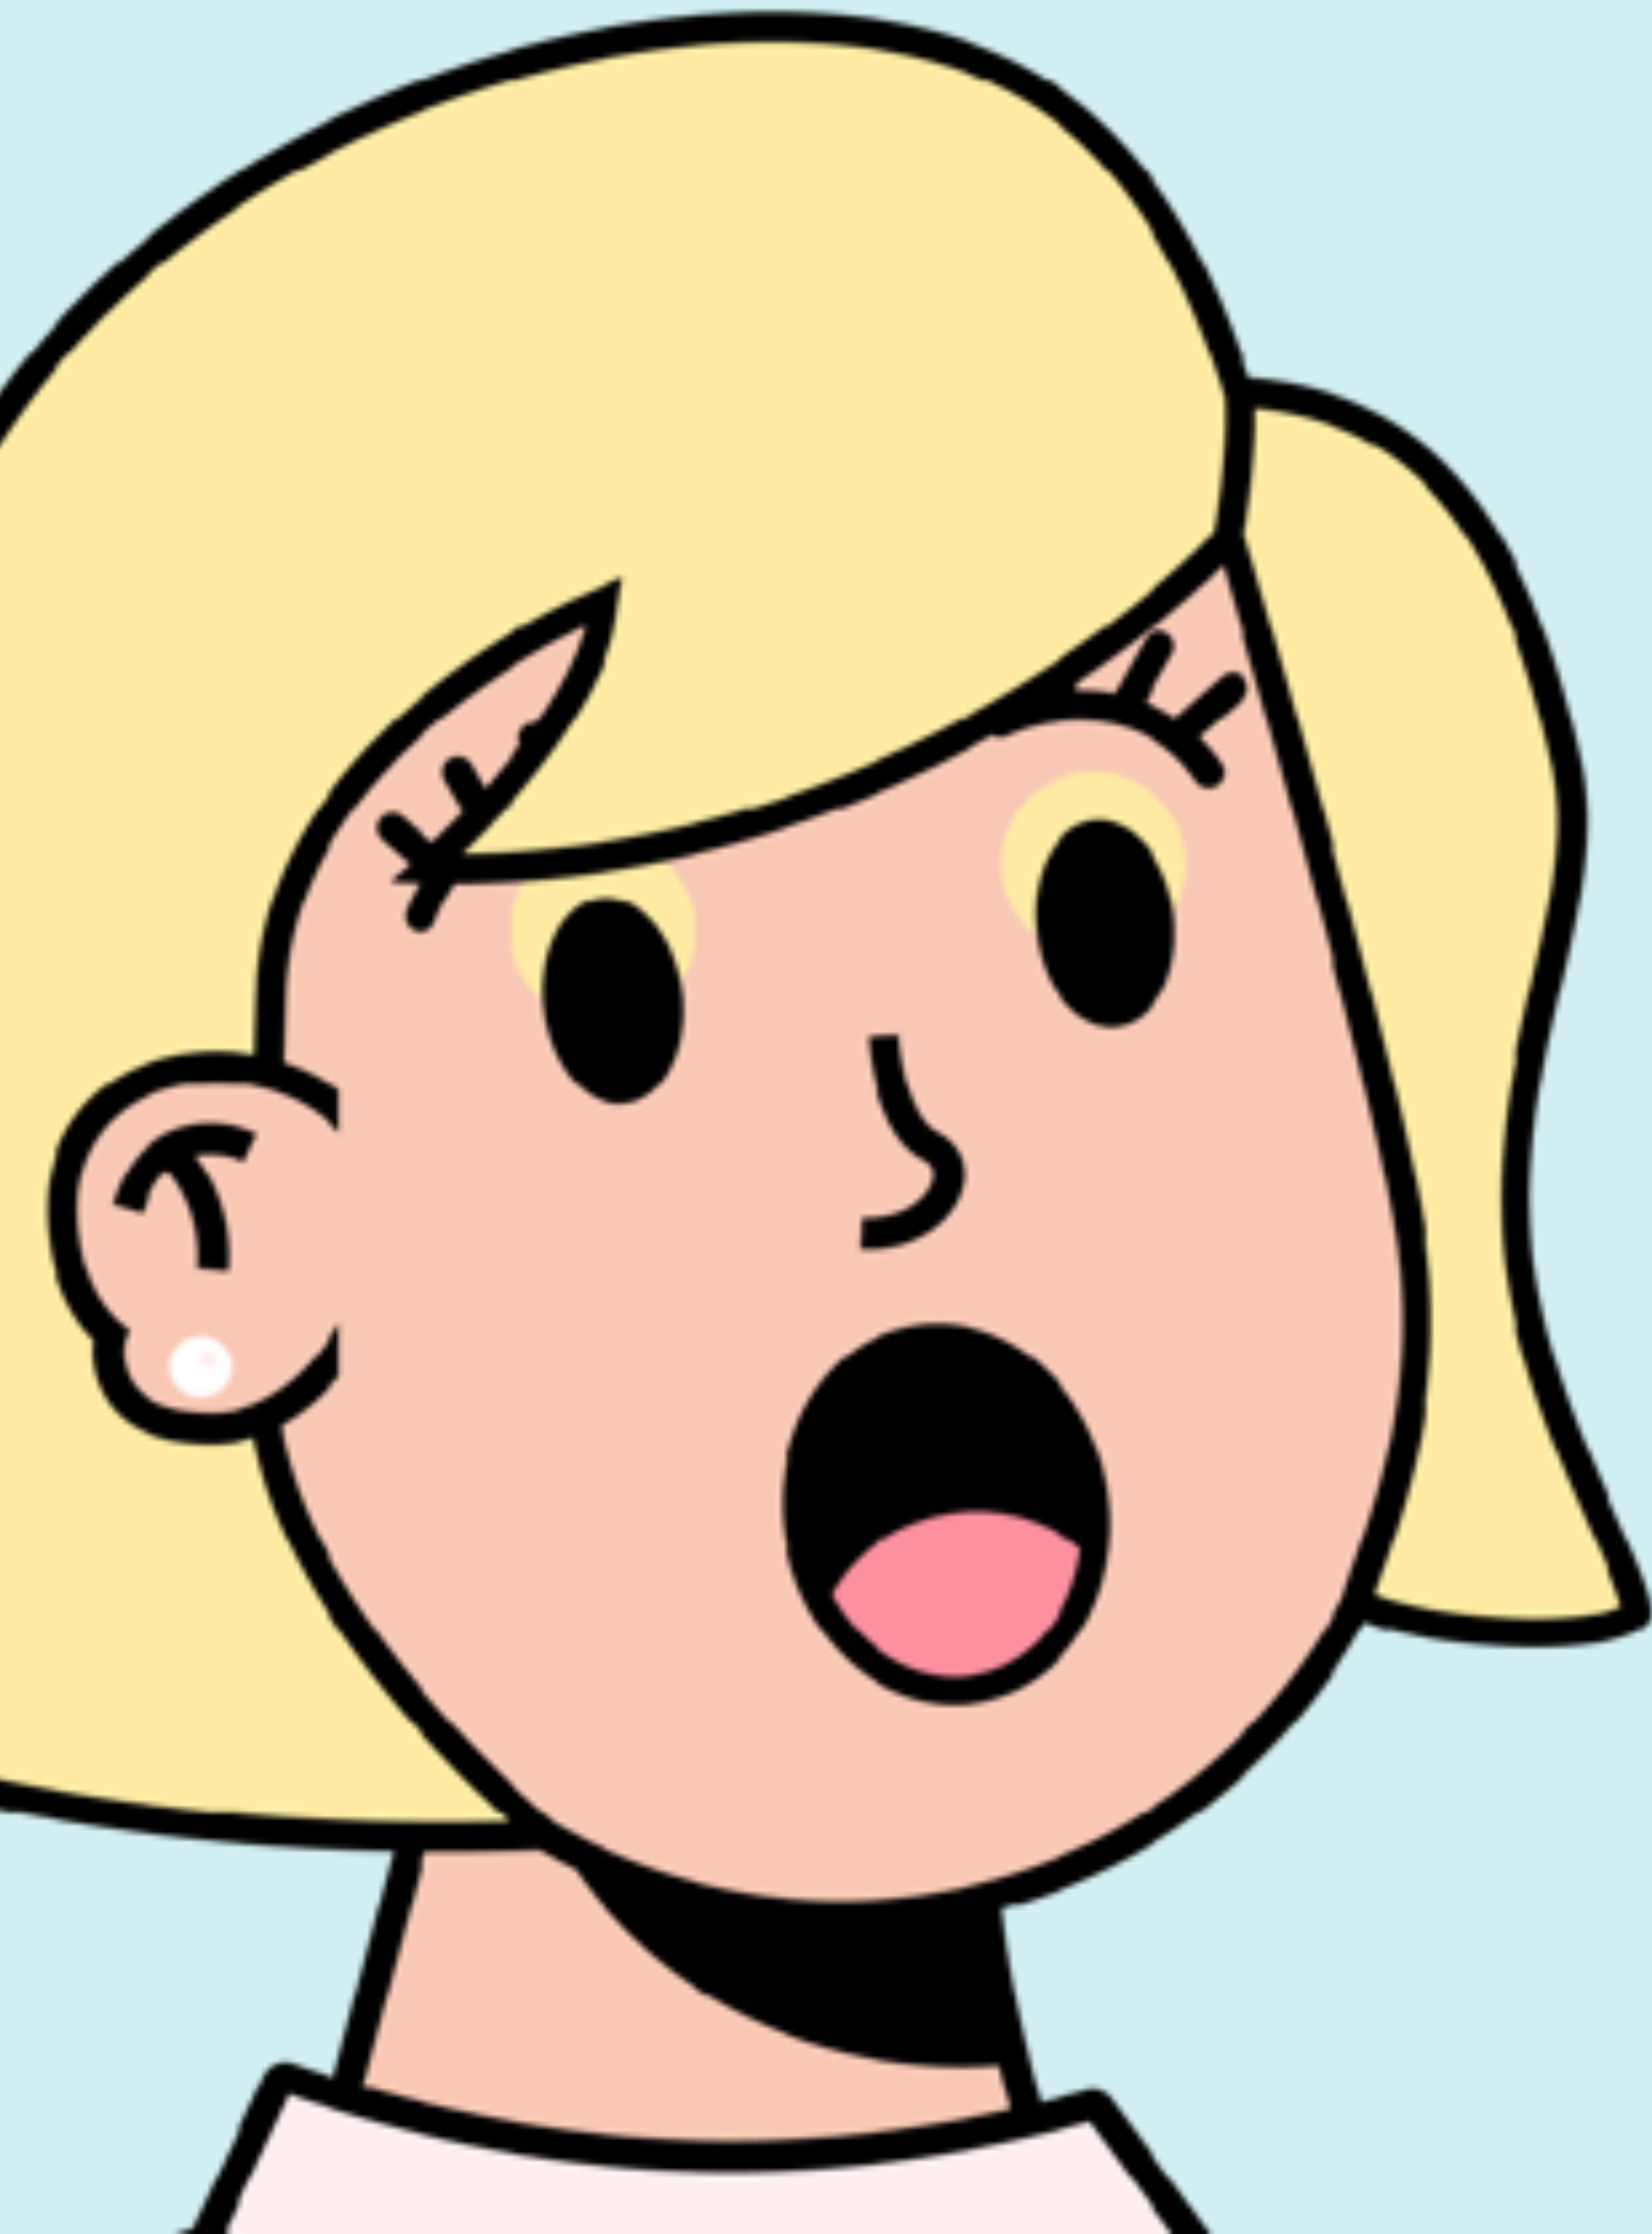

Children ages 5 and under

User Group

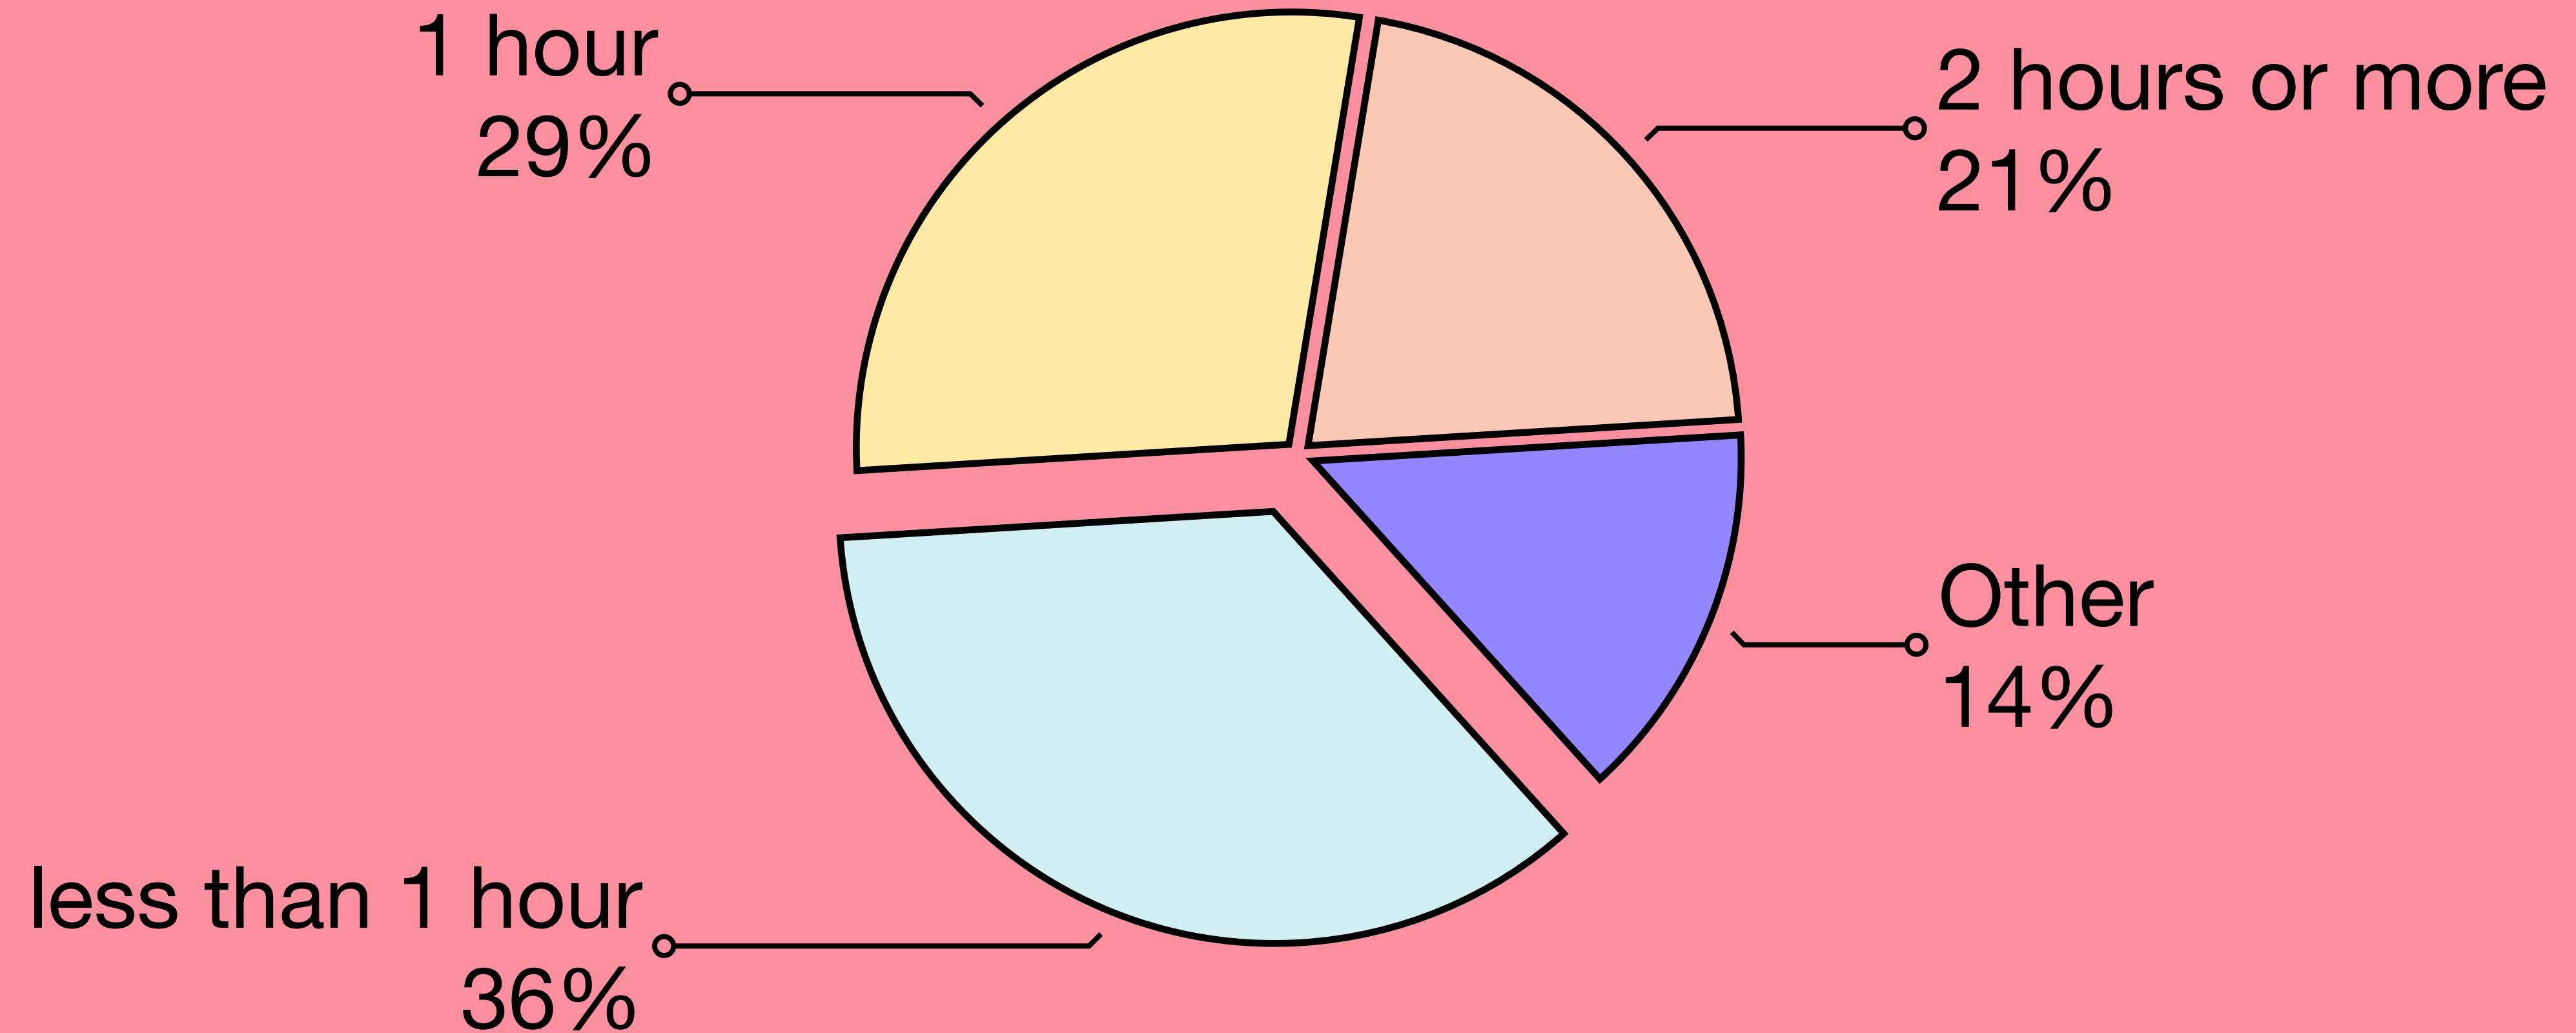

Children below 5

Parents with children under 5

Research

Time on Devices

Usage Type

Pain Points

Parents need time for themselves and other tasks.

Parents give children screens despite the health drawbacks.

Parents don't feel comfortable leaving their child unattended with a screen.

Opportunity Areas

Children appreciated activity time away from screens

Parents wanted an easier and safer solution to keep children occupied

Parents wanted a larger scope of education

How might we reduce excessive screen time while keeping children engaged without supervision?

Concept

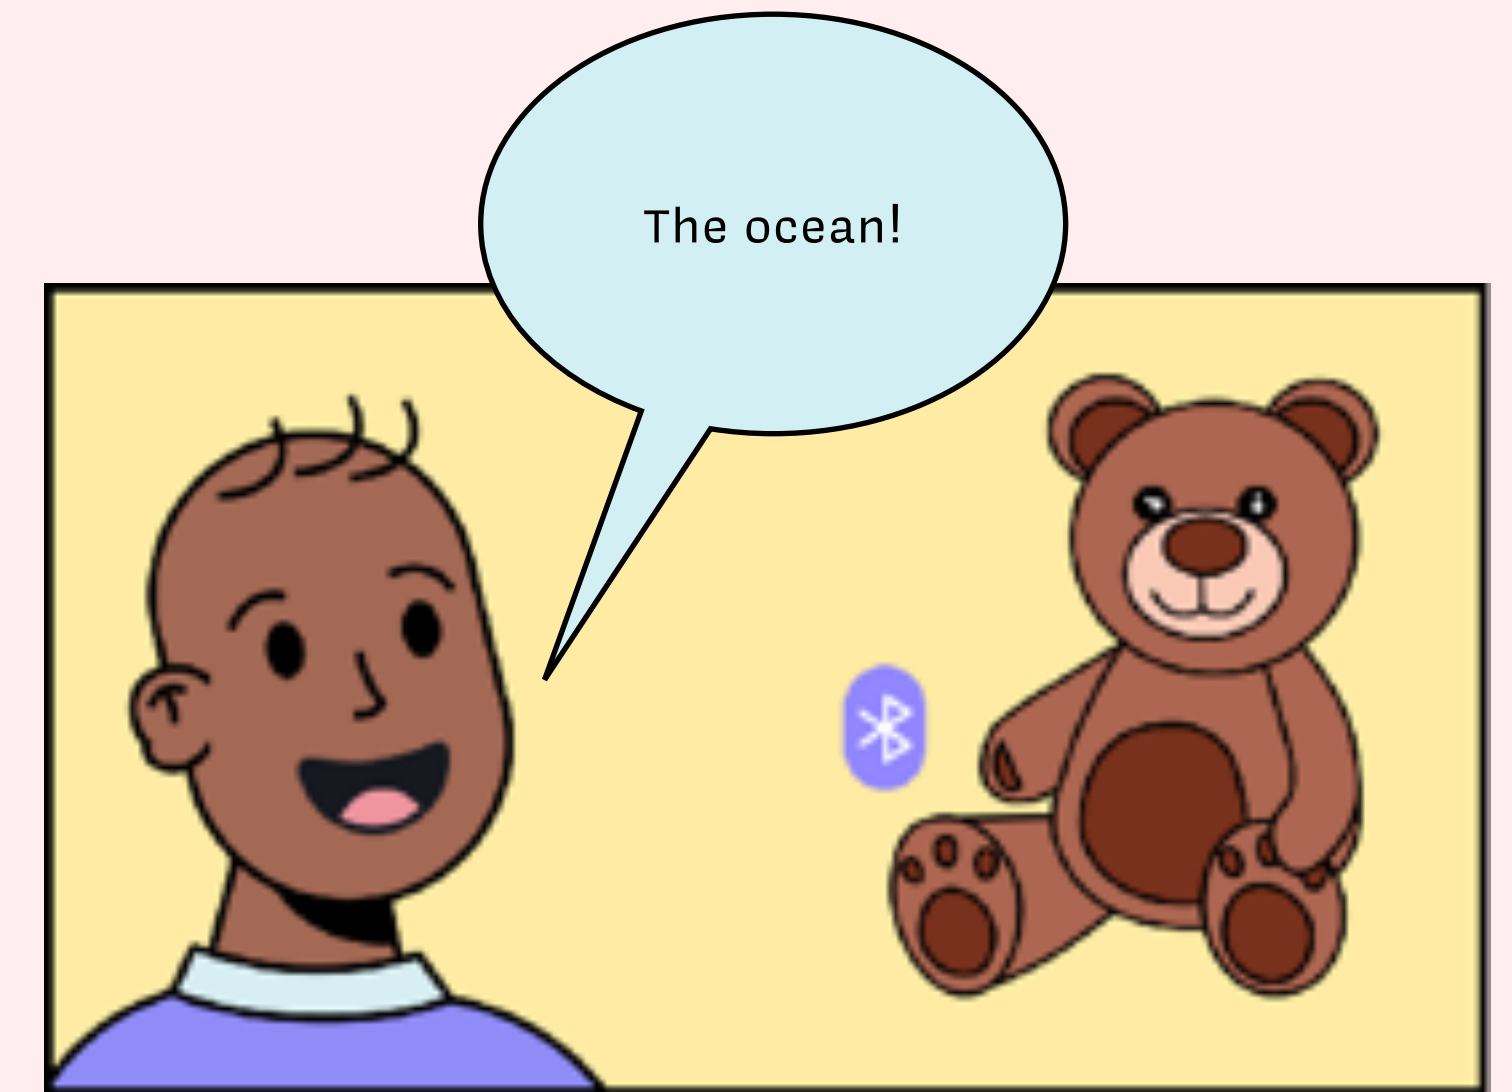

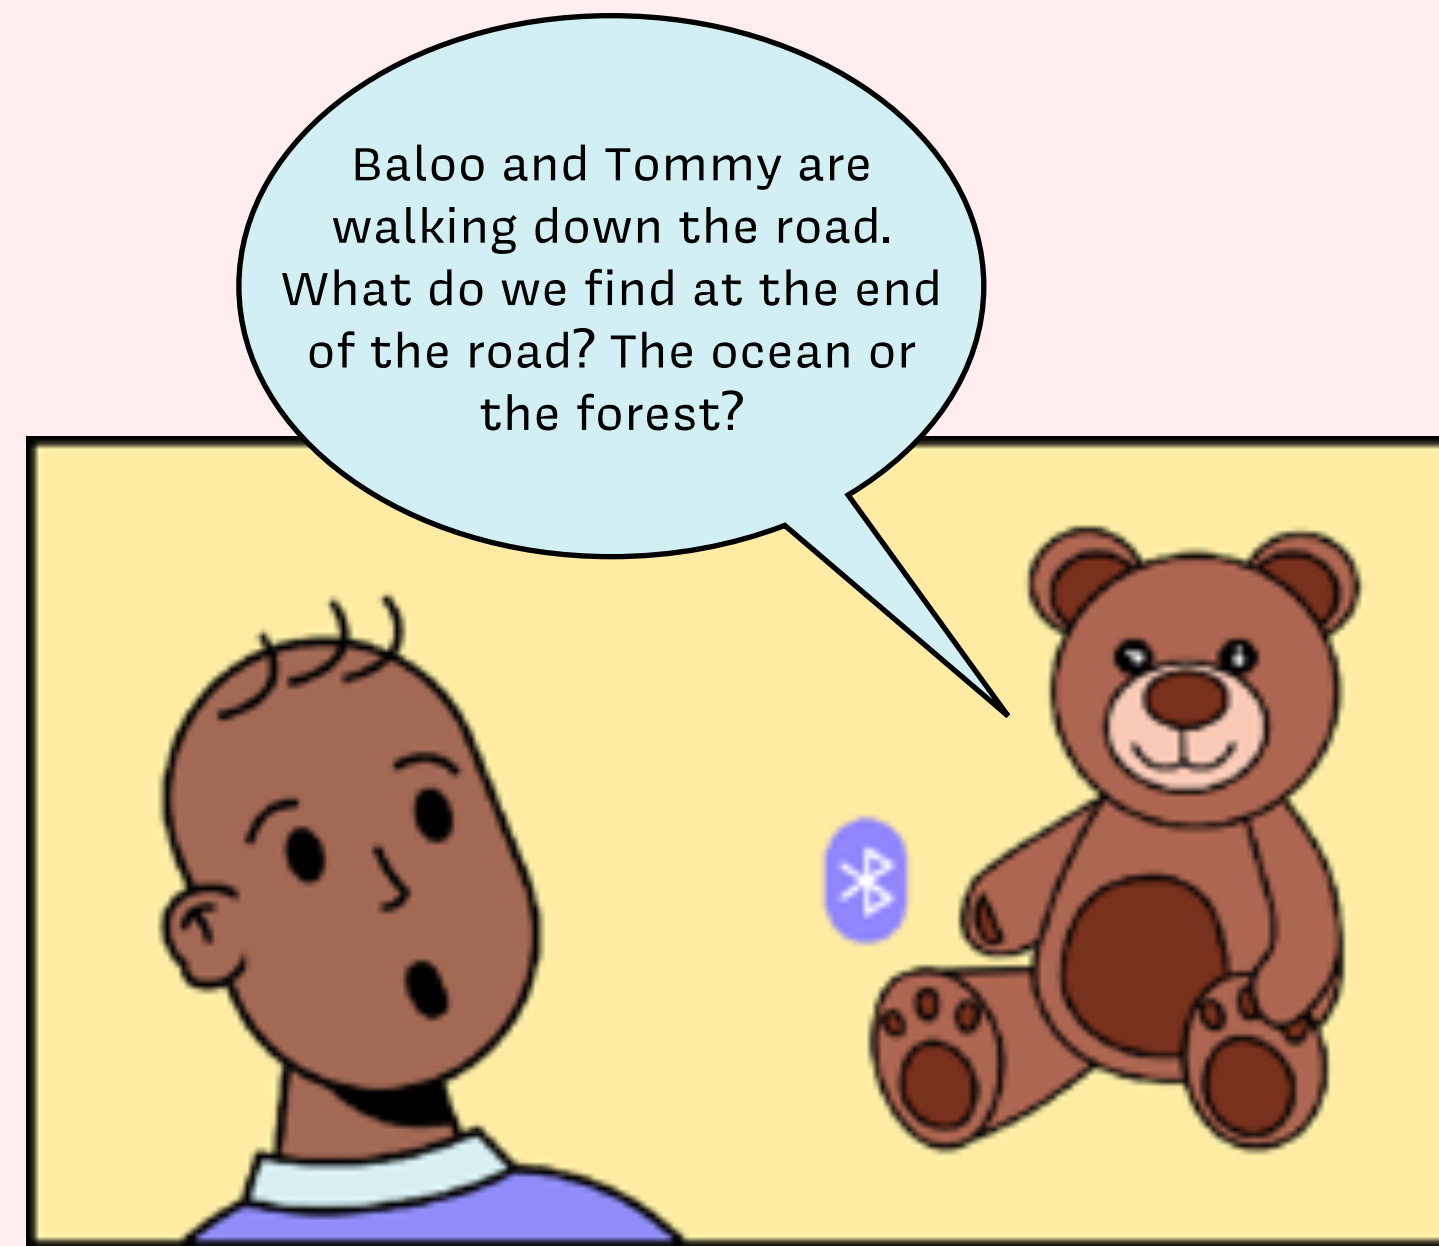

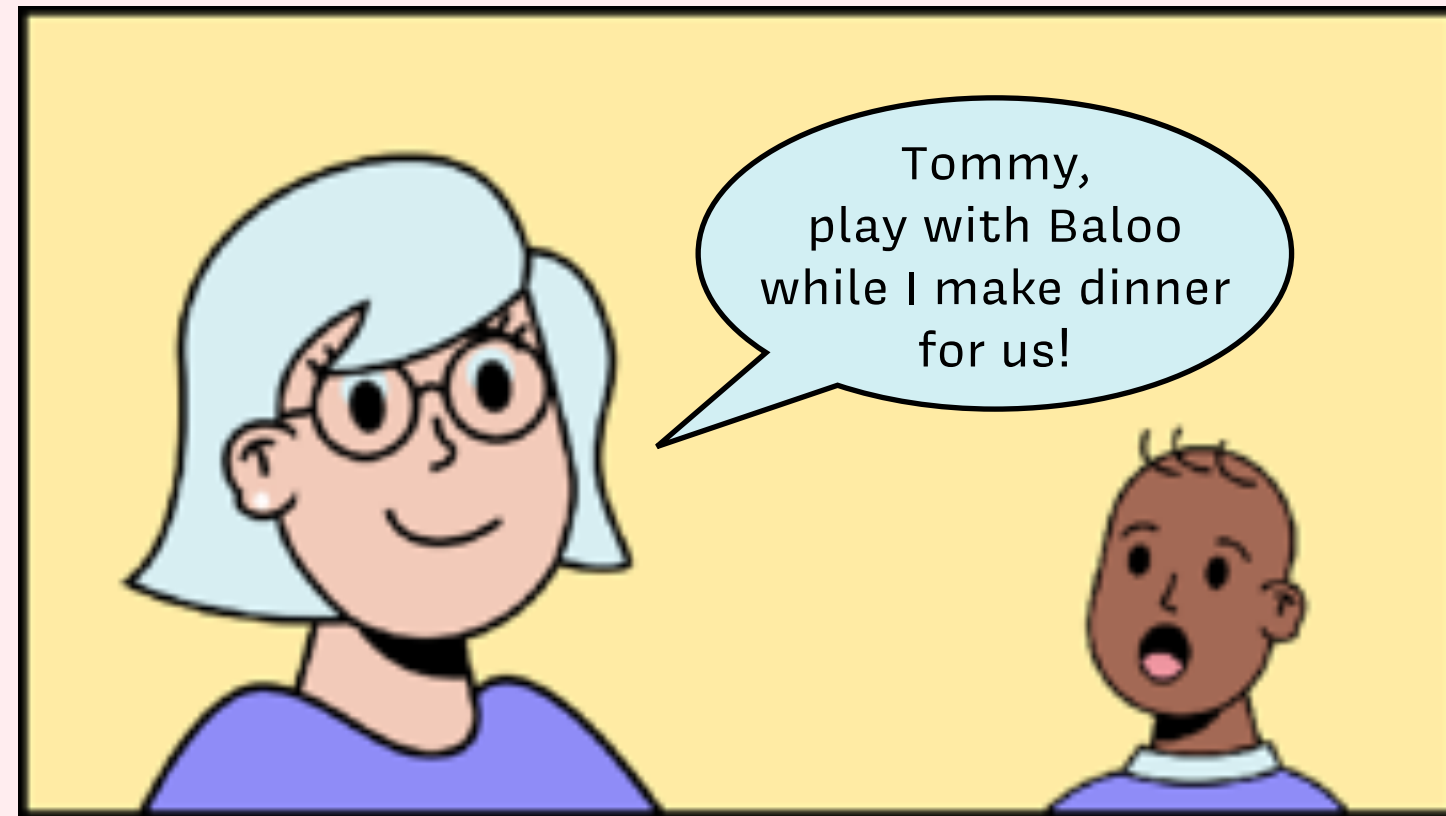

The Solution

Interactive Storytelling

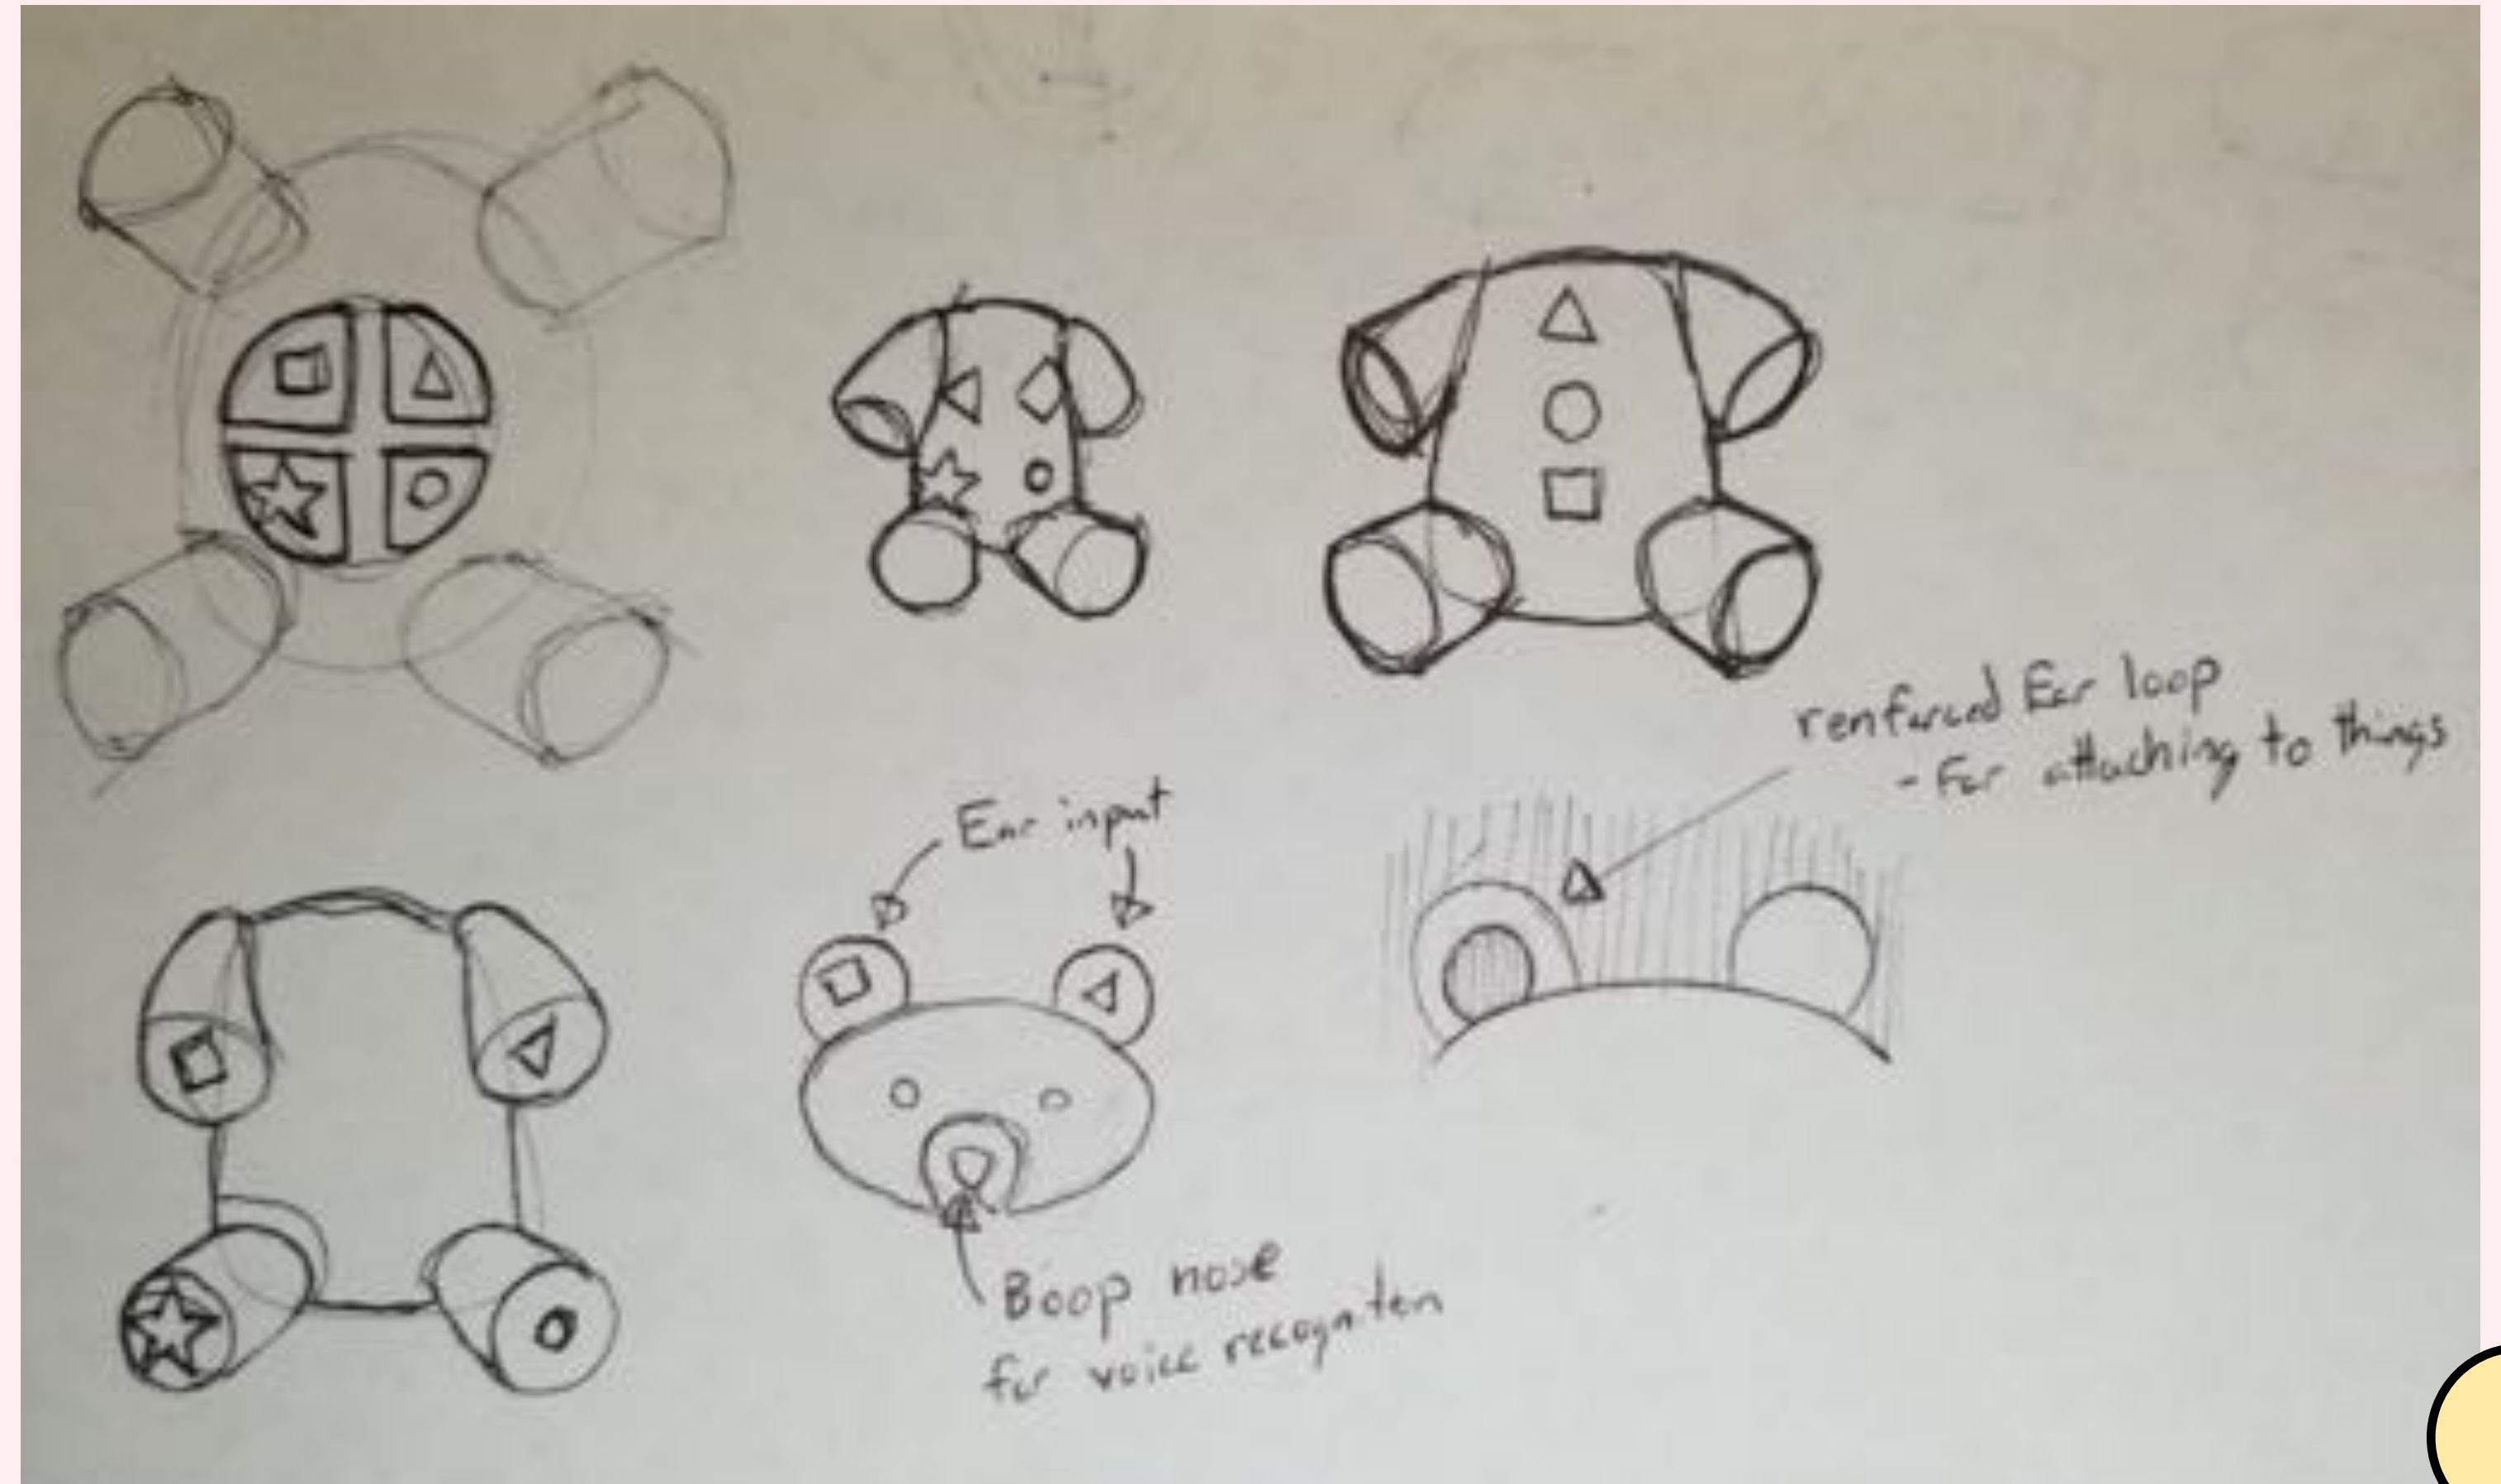

Ability to add own toys as secondary characters

Parent Facilitated App

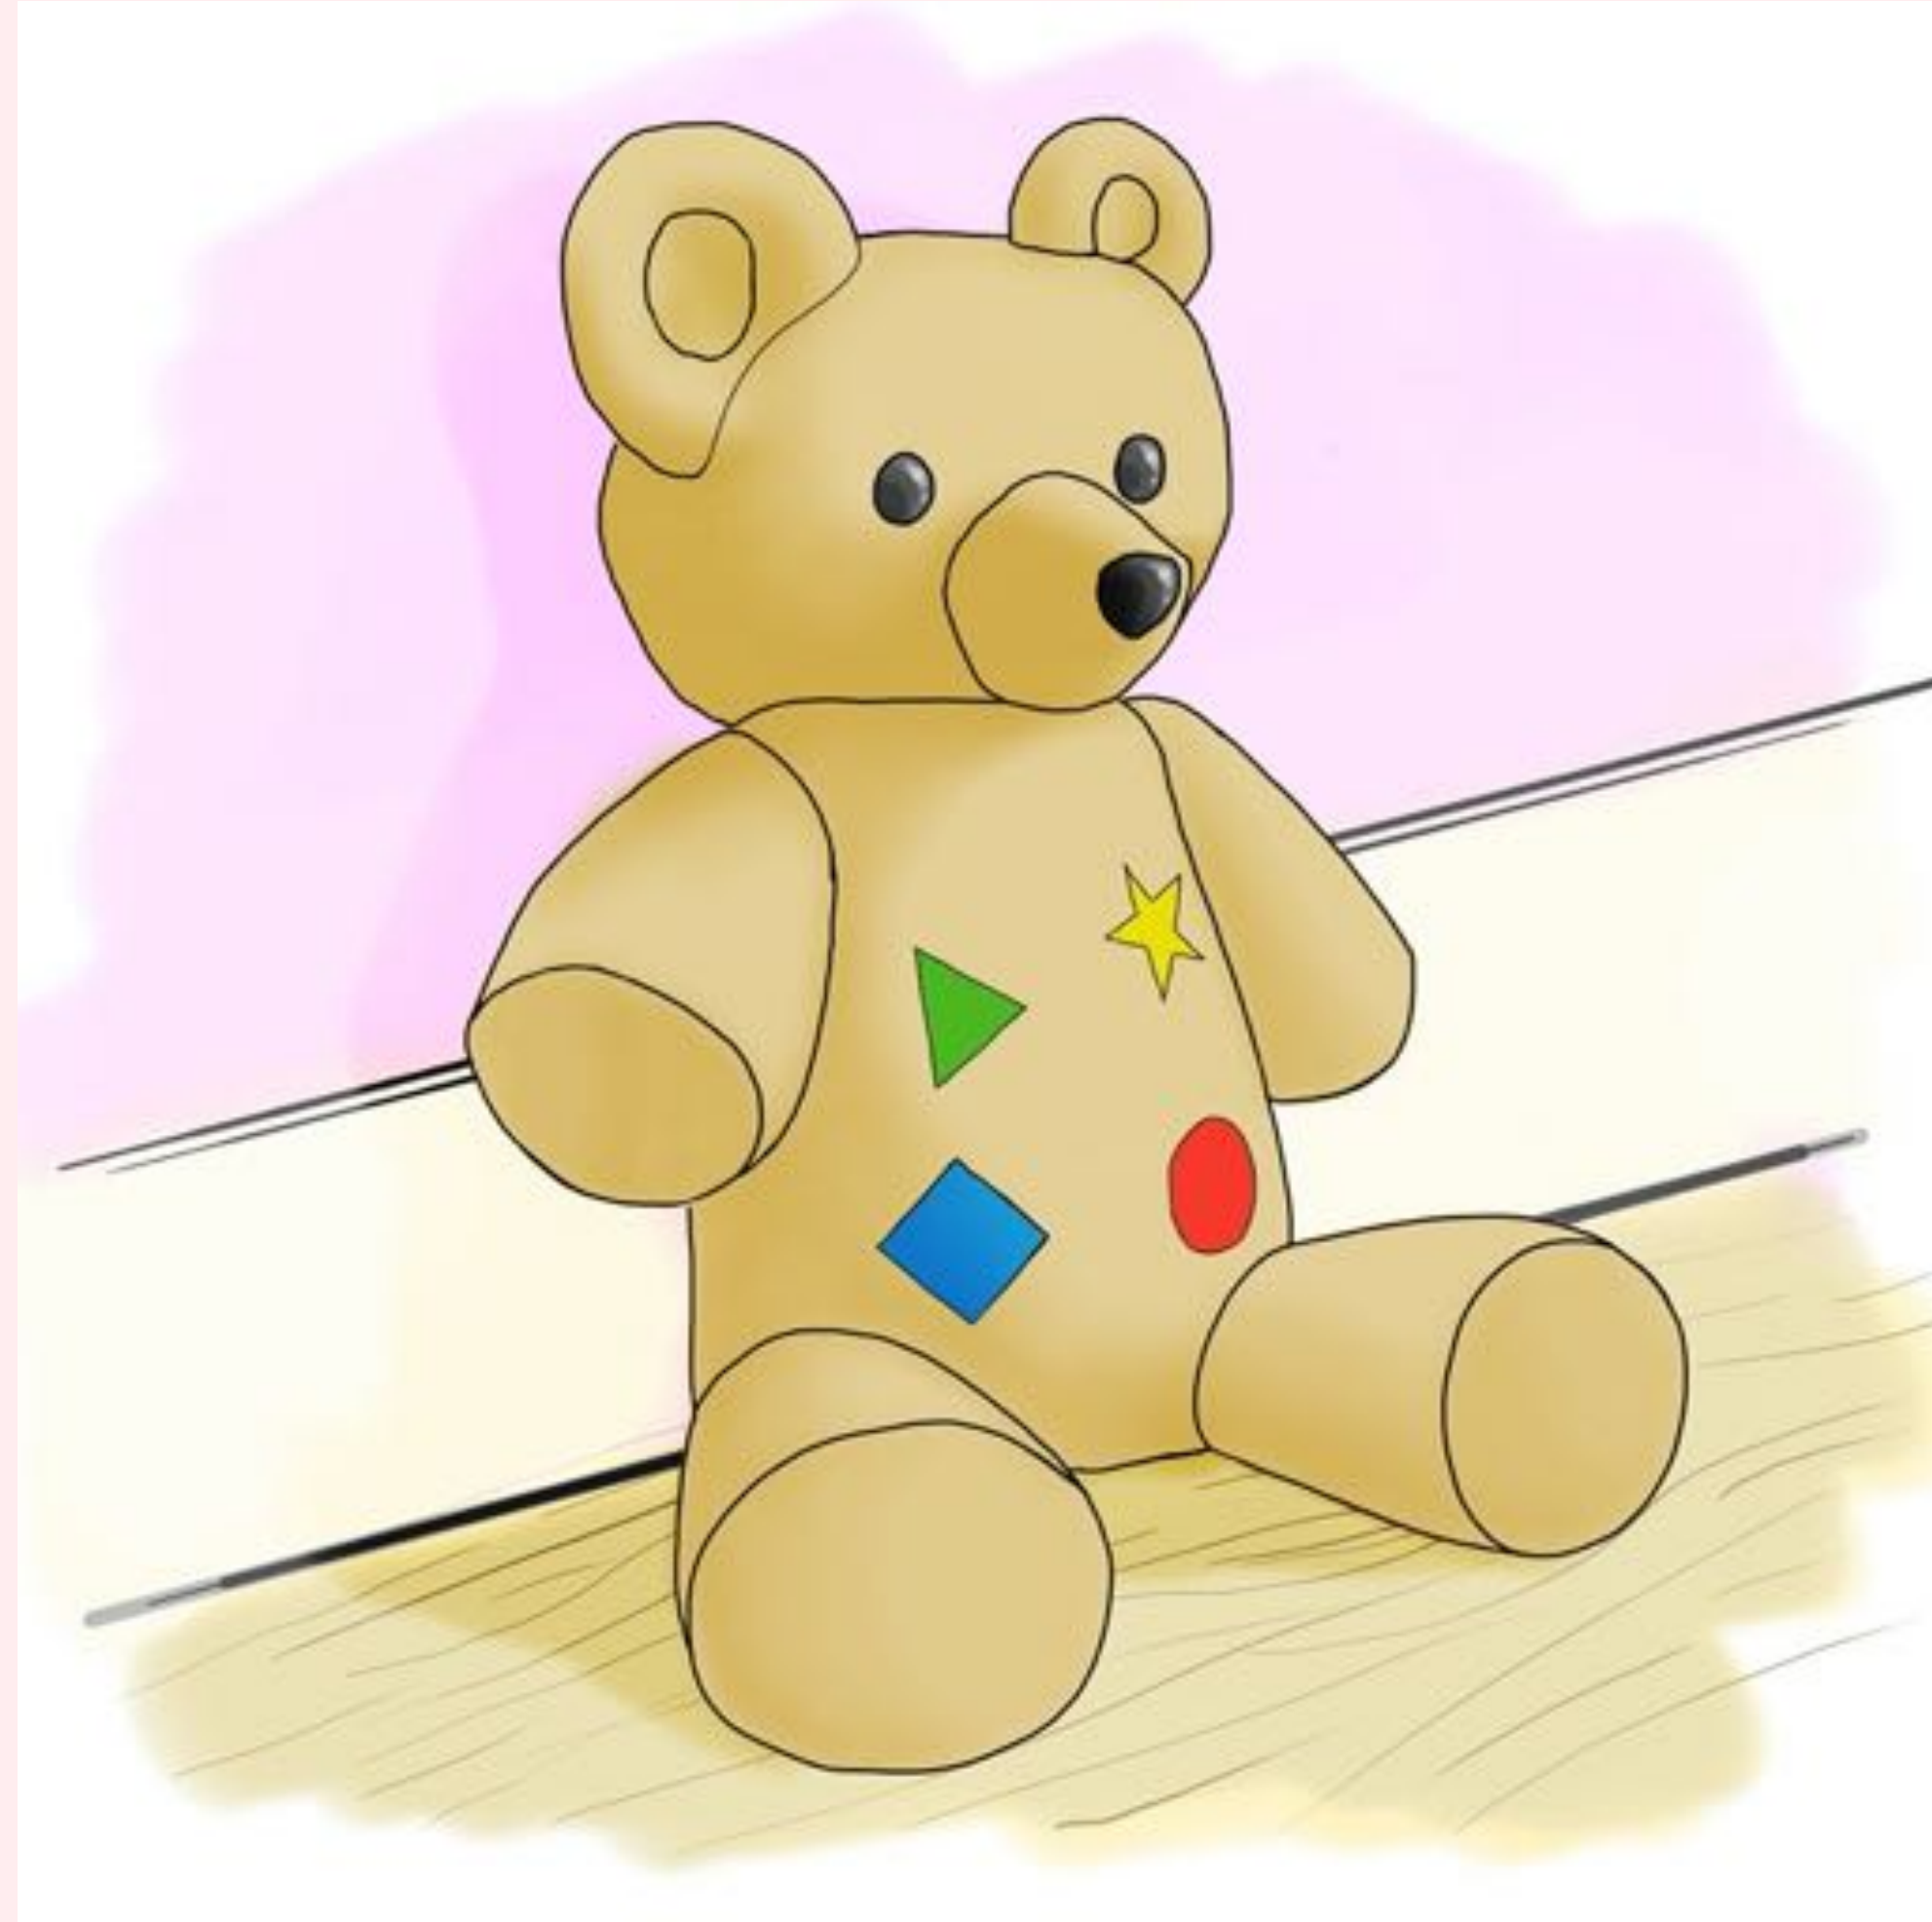

Ability to queue stories and activities

Initial Concept Sketches

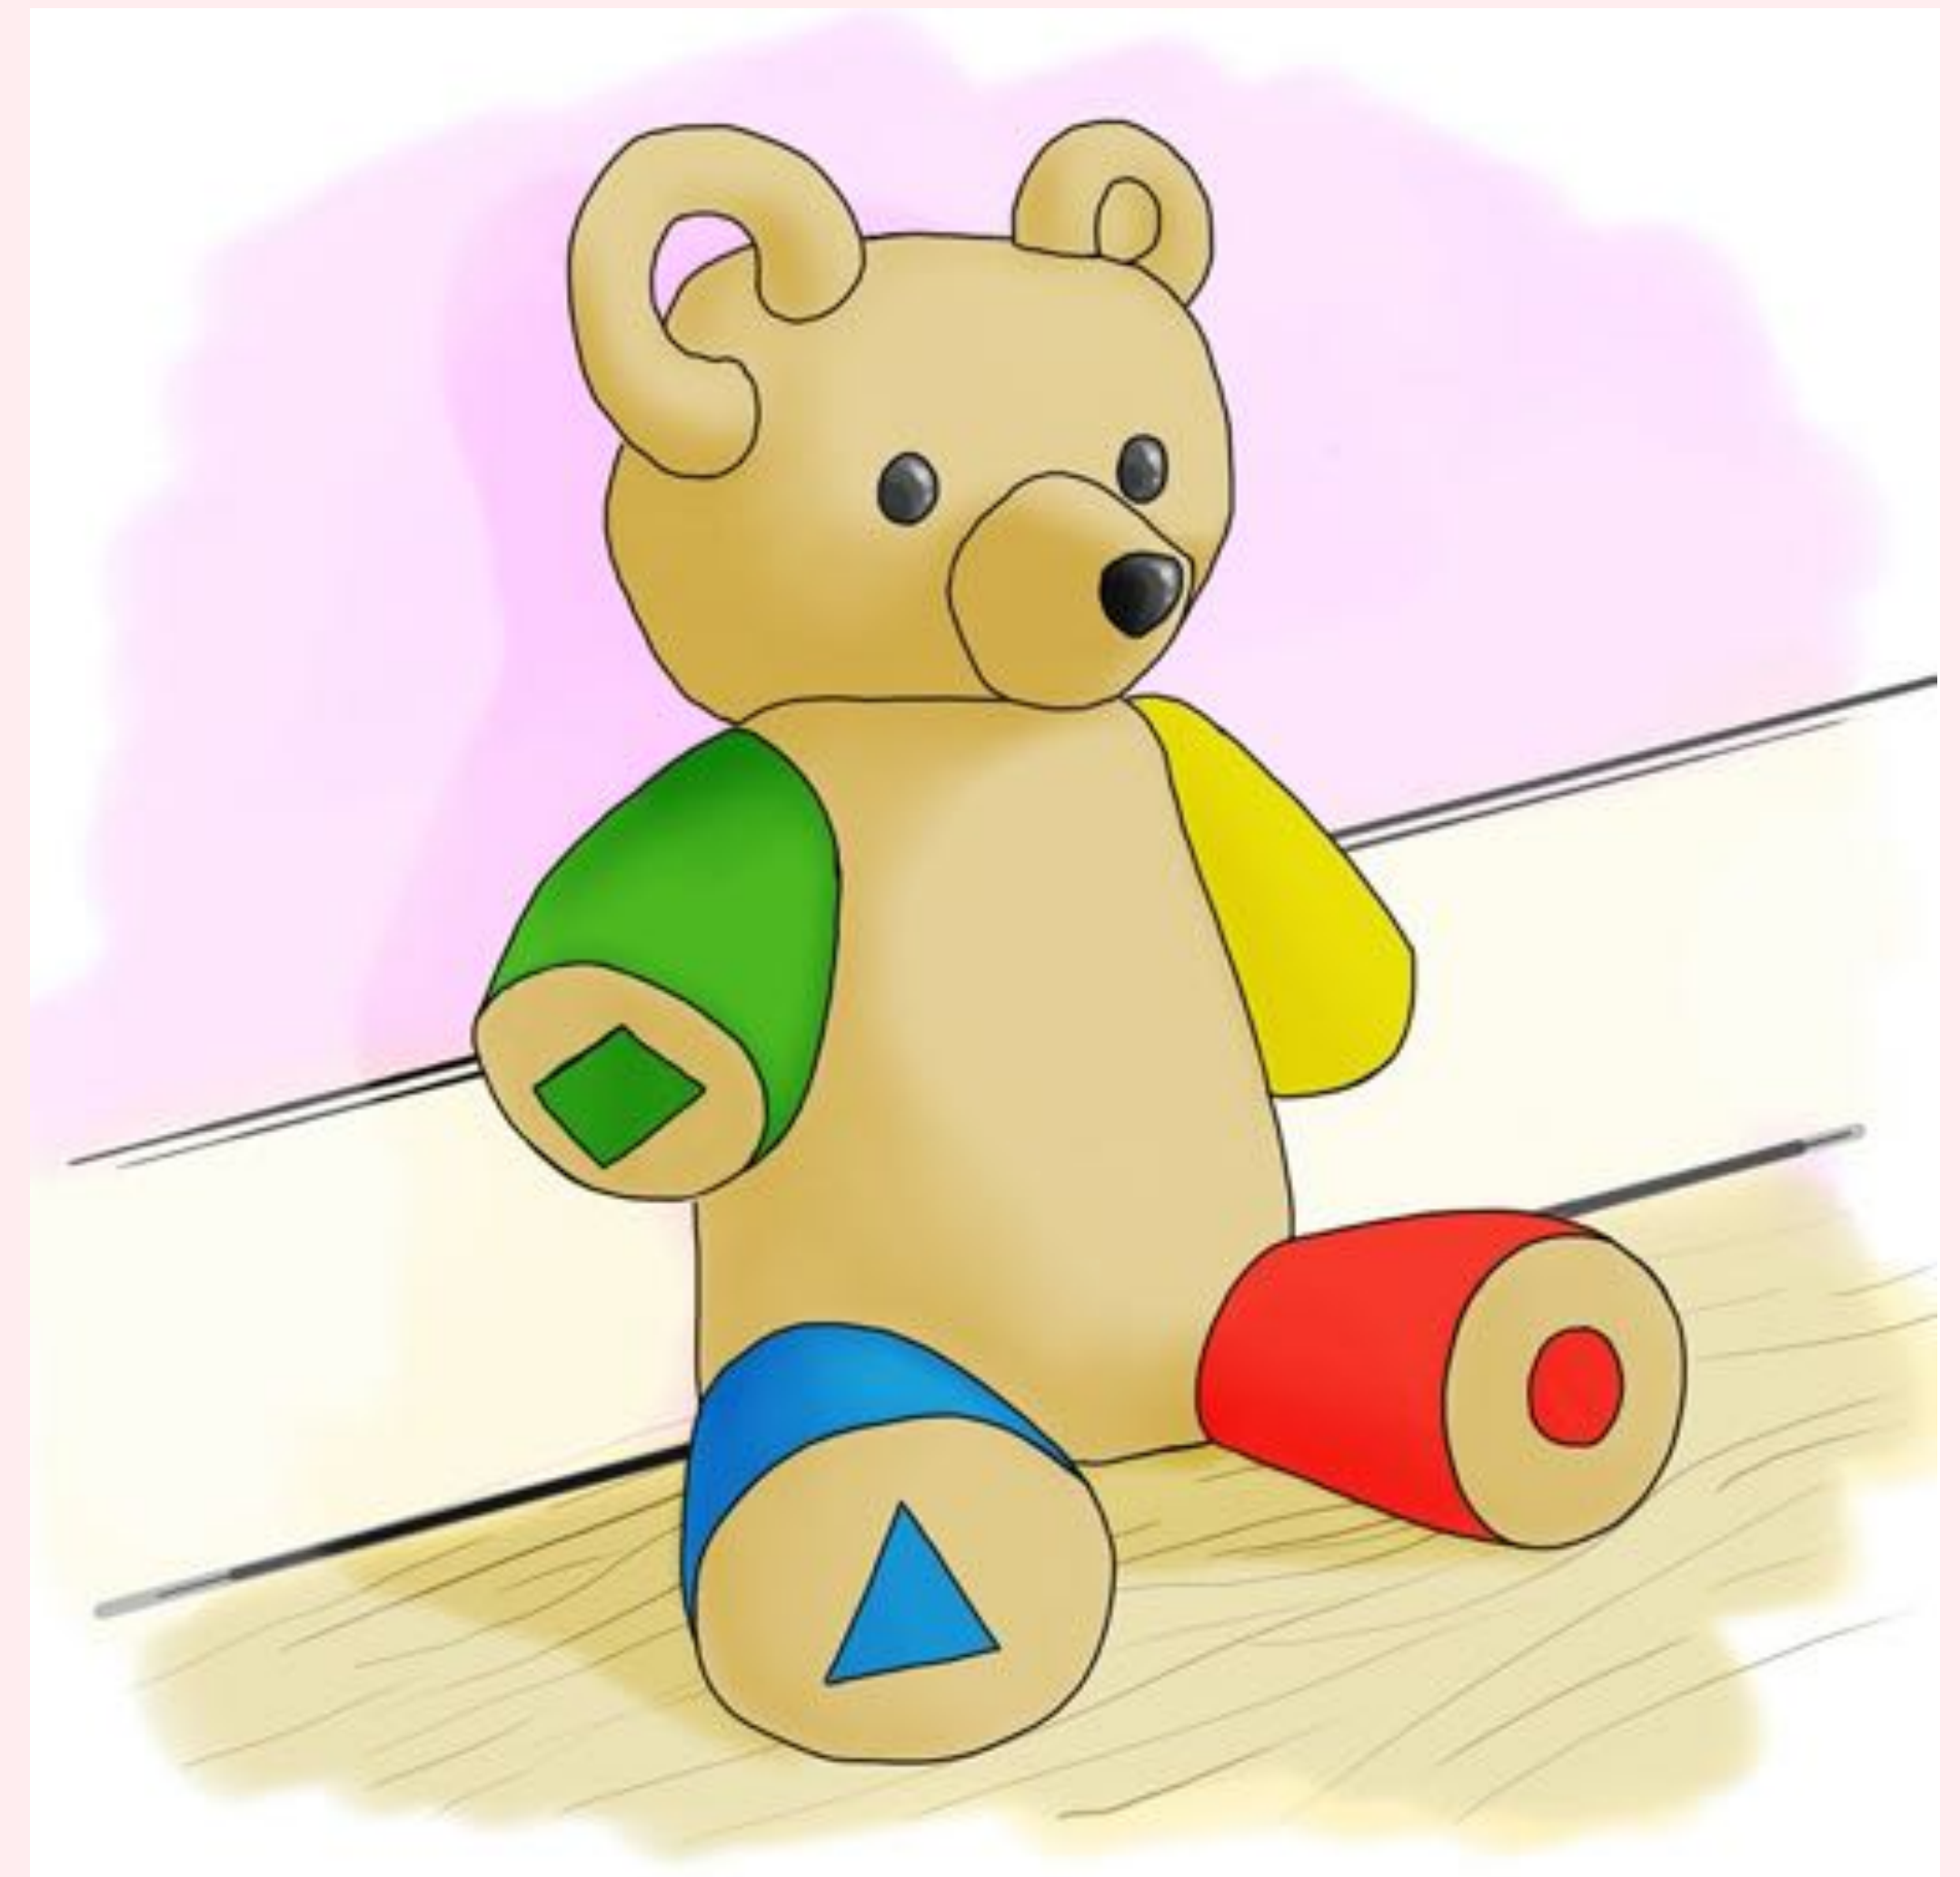

Experimenting with Form

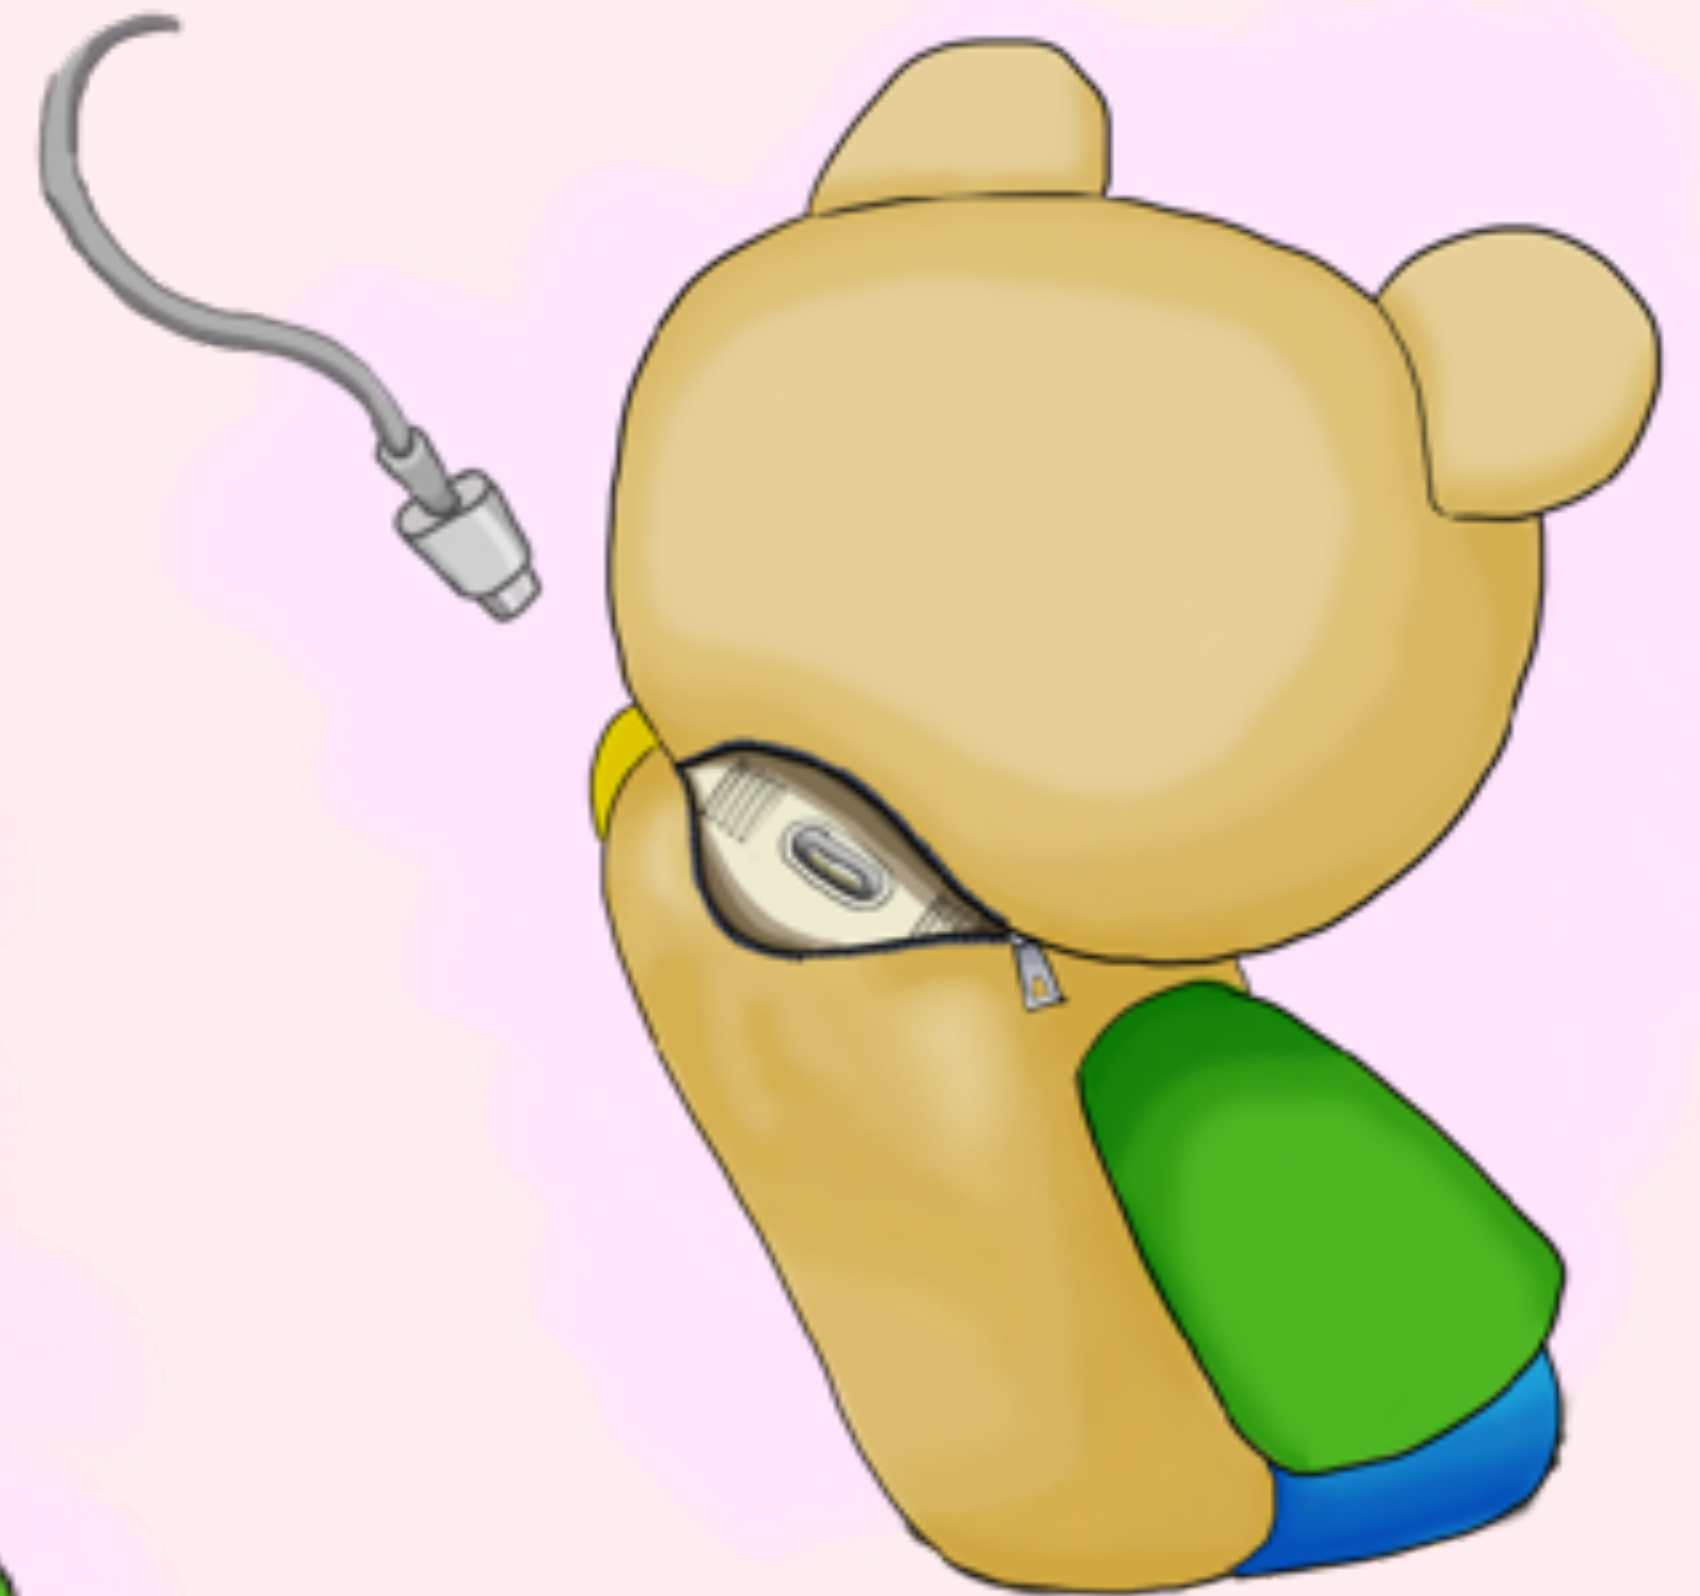

Narrowed Down Form

From the feedback we gathered from participants, we were able to finalize a form that most clearly communicated the decision making aspect on each limb of the teddy bear. By putting each option on a separate limb, the child would be engaging with Baloo more naturally, then if the choices were simply placed on the chest or on only one limb.

Charging Capabilities

High Fi Form

Screen-less Storytelling

Interactive storytelling is unique to Baloo because we completely eliminated the screen while being able to still stimulate the child's senses for an exciting experience.

The story requires a voice activated response for the following prompt.

of 1

Welcome to the forest...

A stylized illustration of a beach scene. On the left, a beach umbrella with alternating dark teal and light blue segments is partially visible. Below it, a light blue beach chair with white frame is positioned. The background consists of several horizontal, wavy bands of light blue and teal, suggesting ocean waves. The overall style is minimalist and modern.

Journey

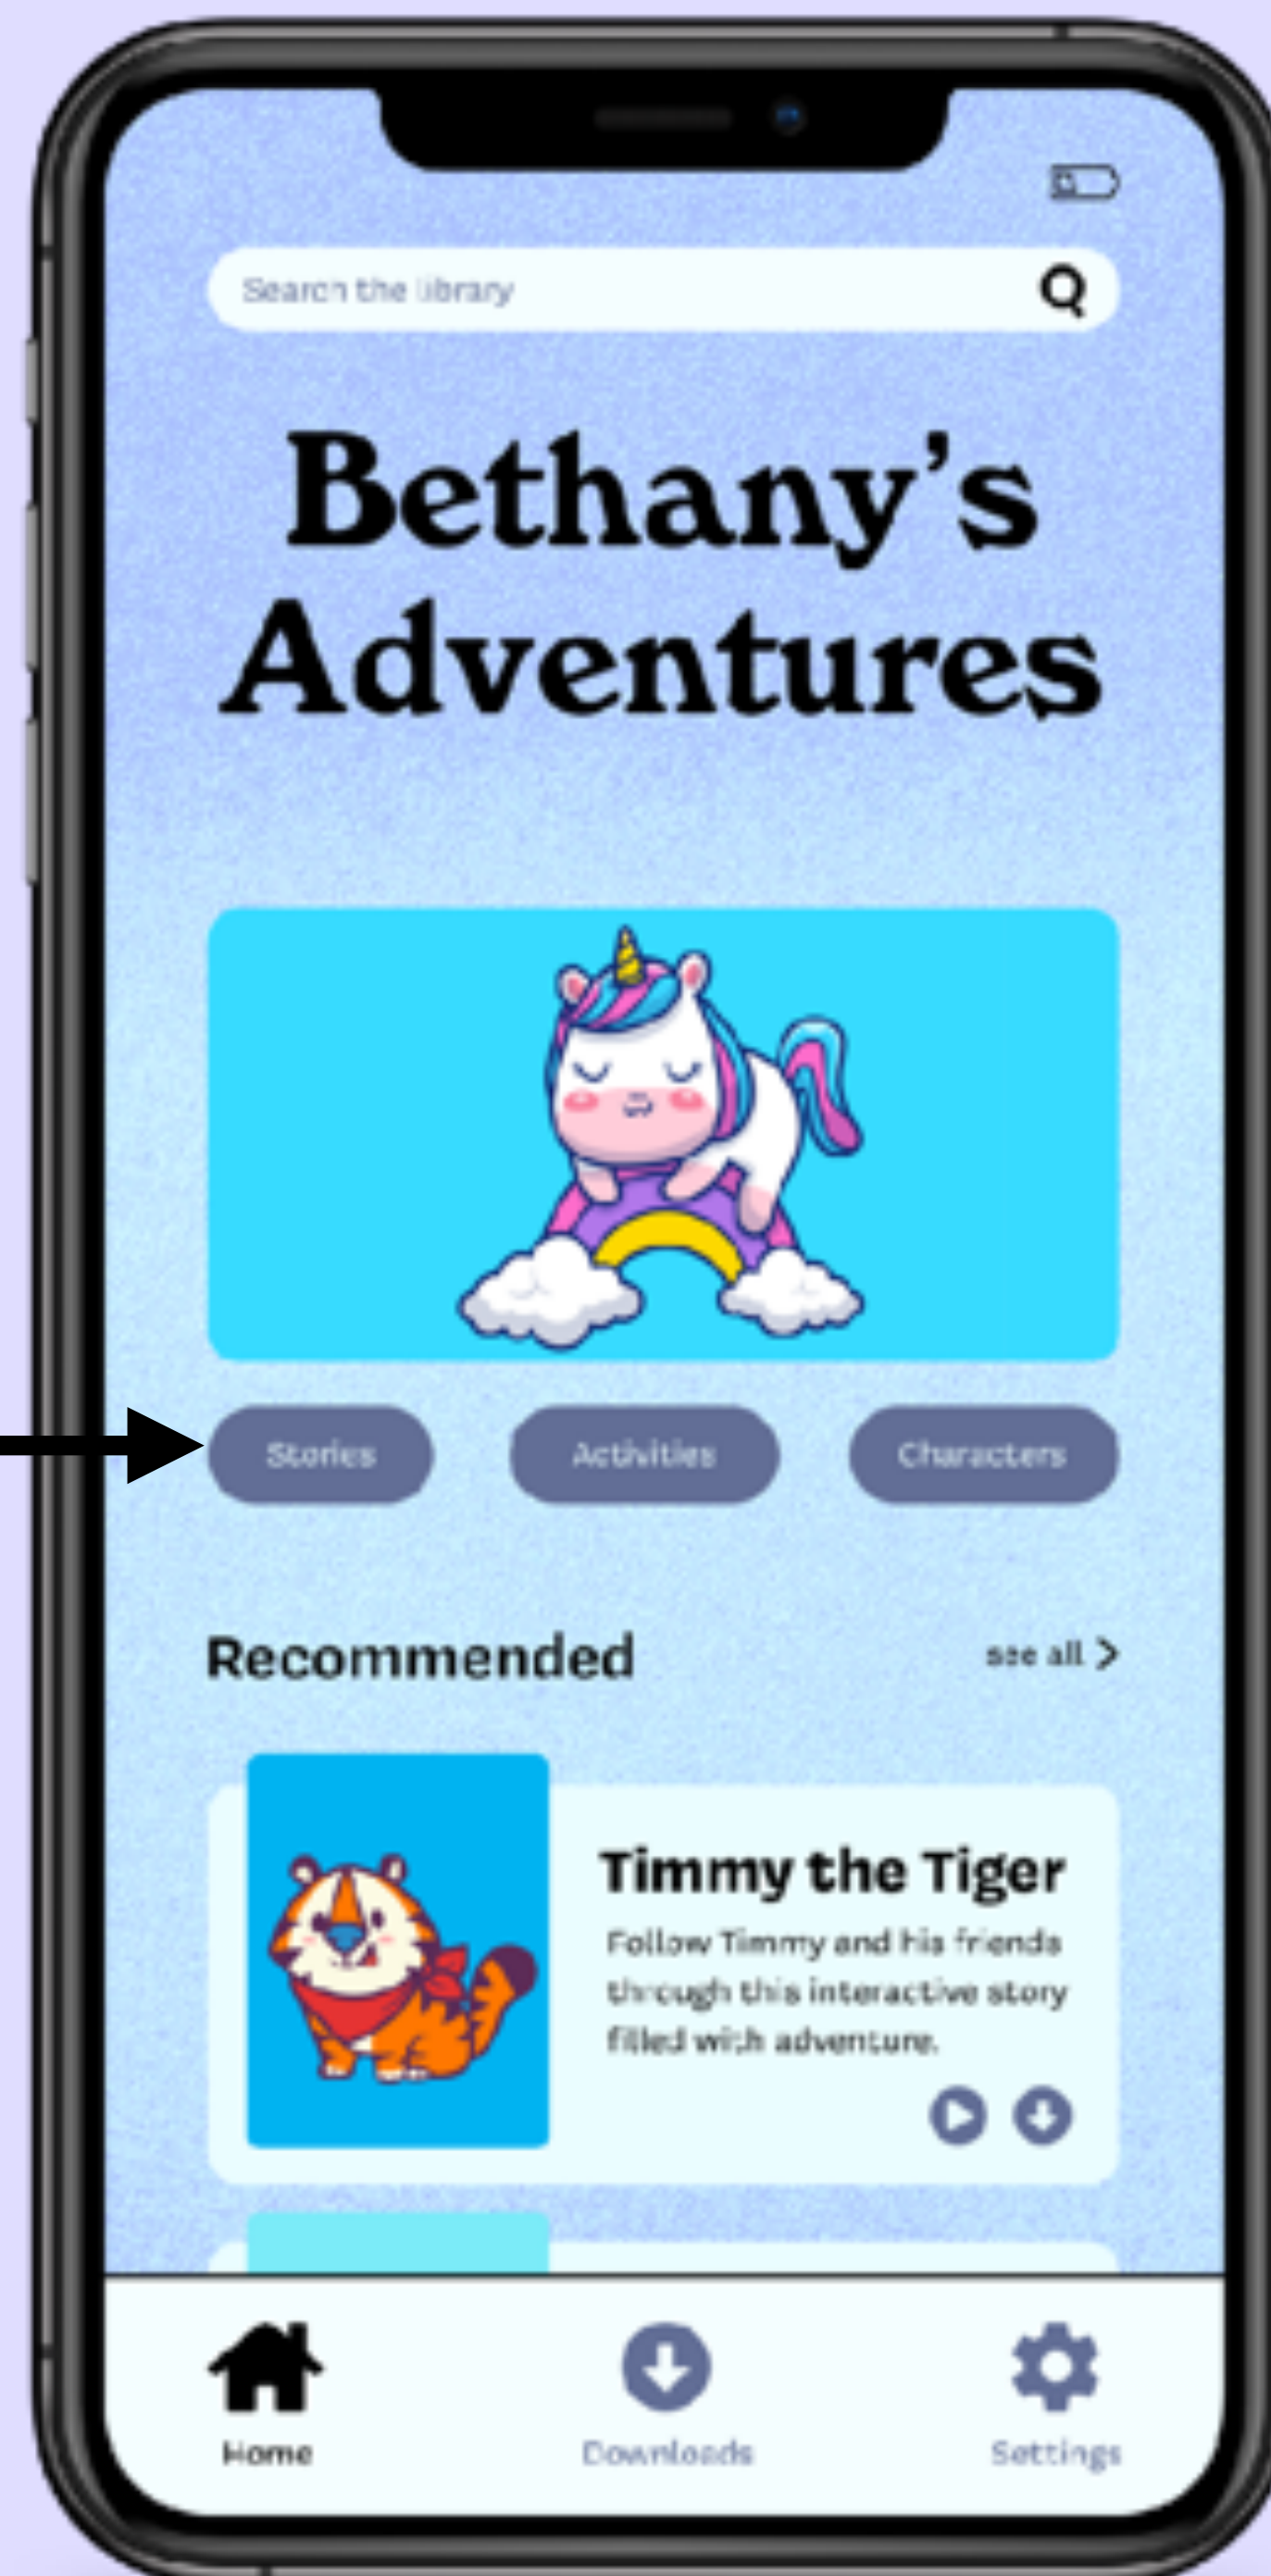

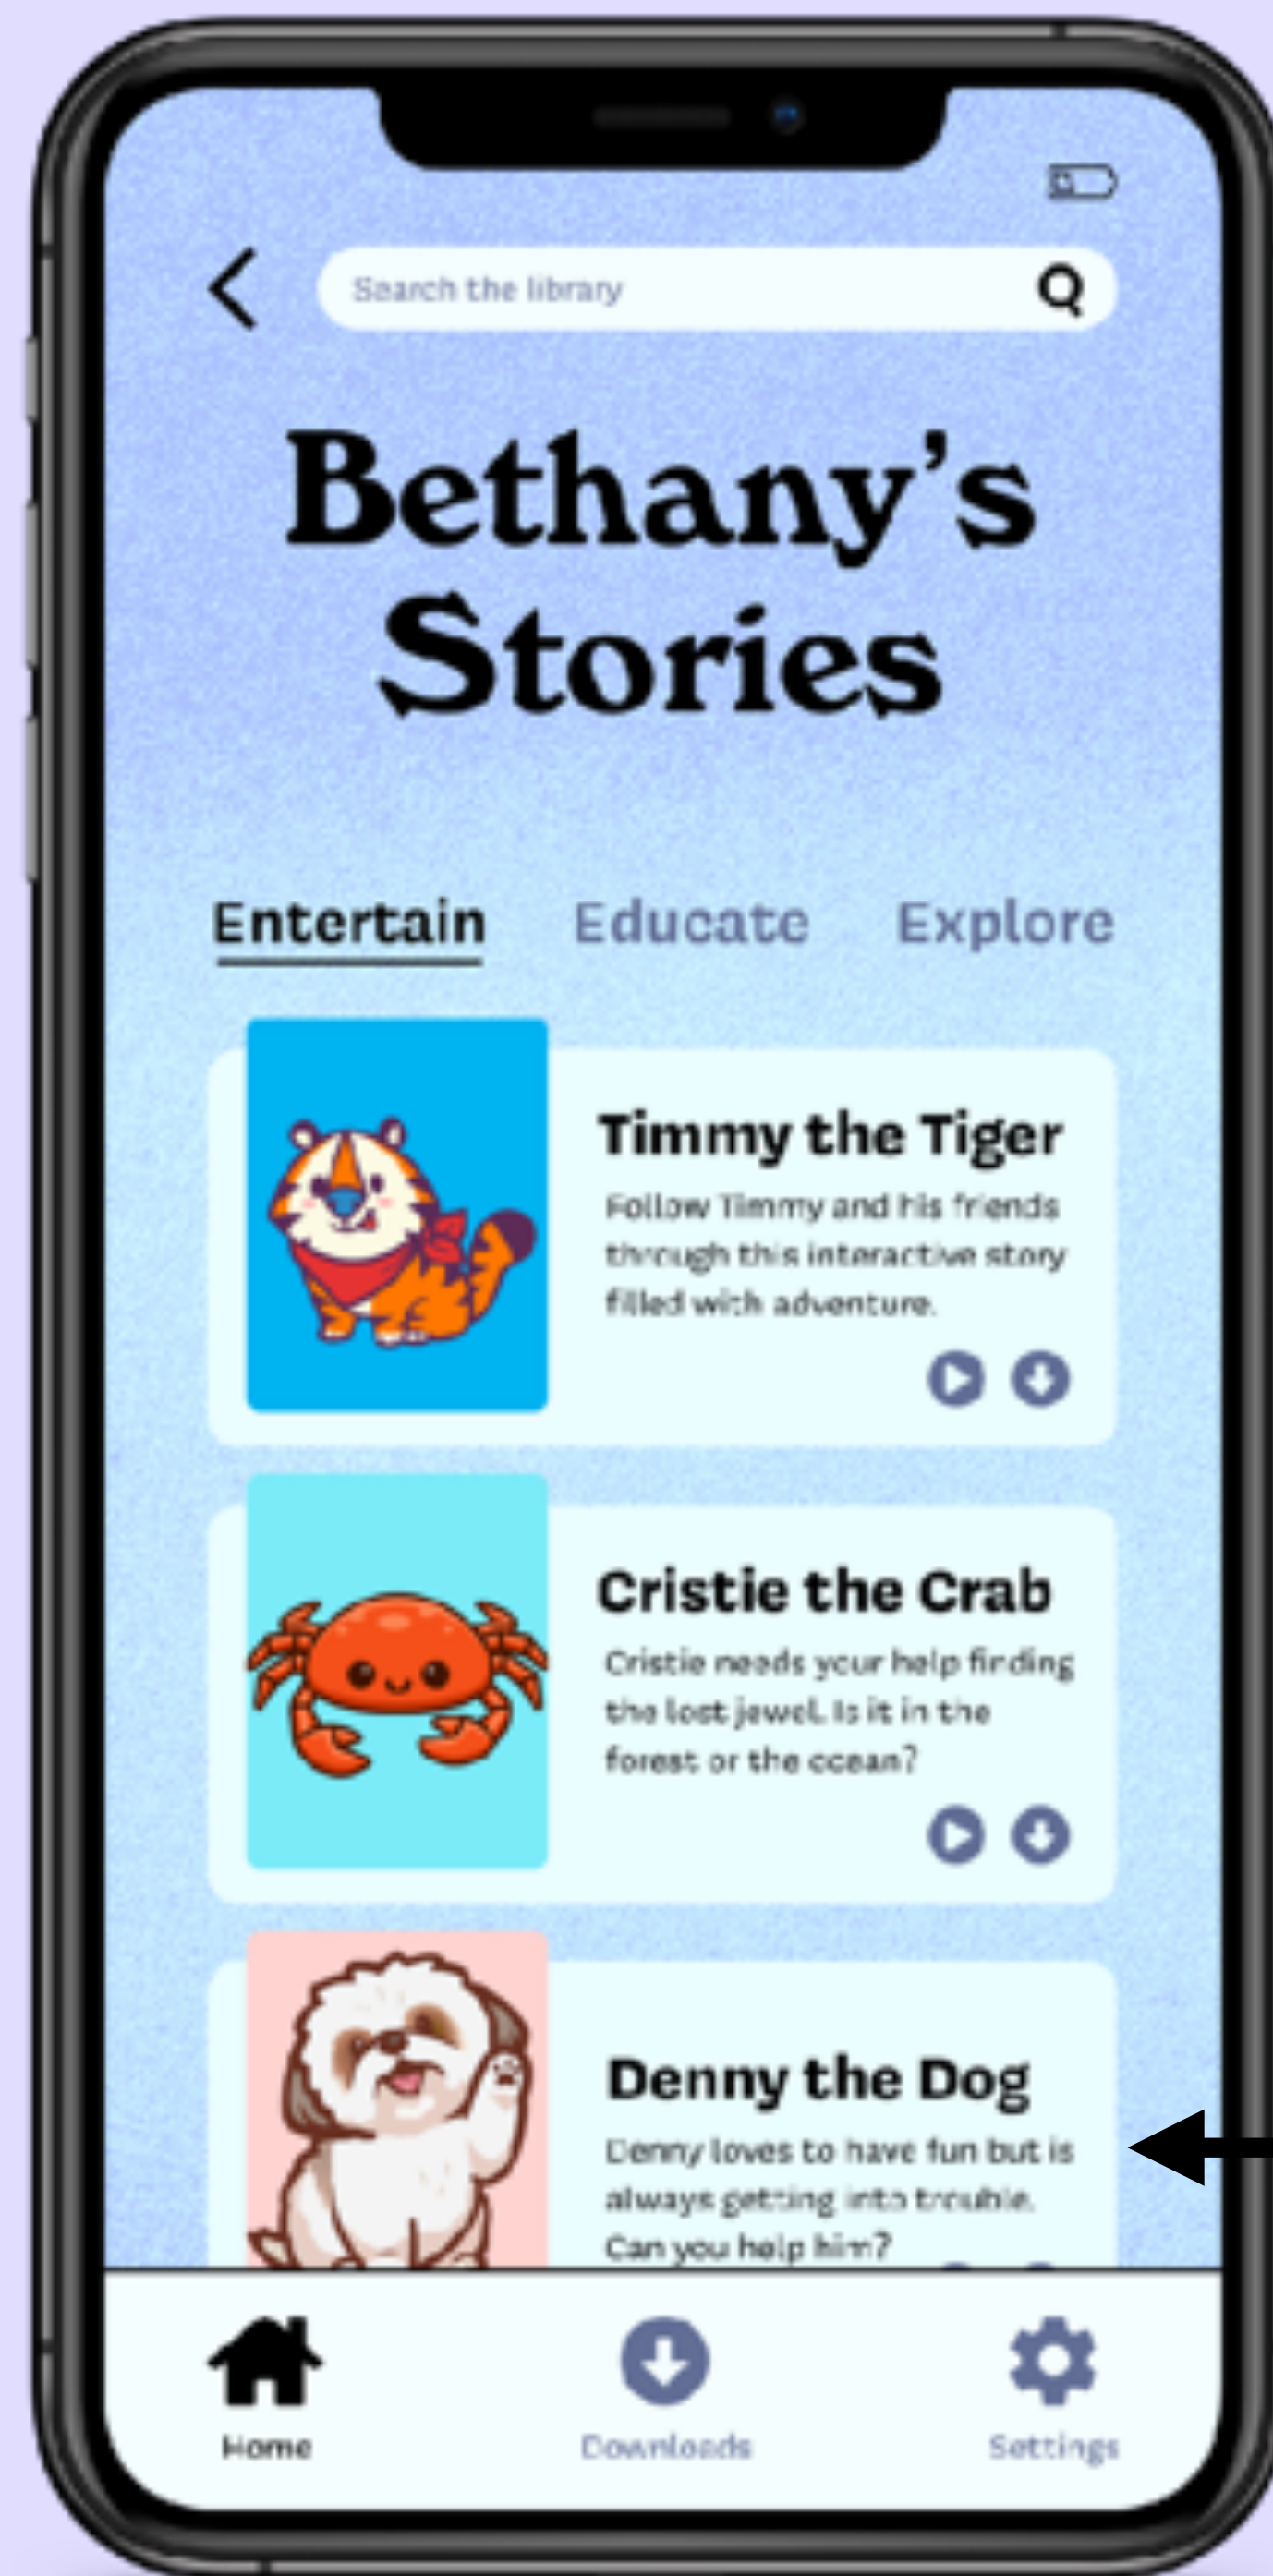

Bethany, I'll be right back from a short call. Meanwhile, I'll play a story through Baloo for you

I want to listen to Denny the Dog today!
